Personal statement : In approximately 500 words, discuss your research interests, career aspirations, why you want to participate in the SDFDR program, and how this program will help you reach your academic or career goals.

Diversity statement : In approximately 500 words, use this space to discuss :

- The most important experiences in your personal life that have led to your interest in addiction research or behavioral/biomedical research as a whole.
- Your commitment to building a diverse and inclusive community within the addiction research field and the scientific community as a whole, including any applicable leadership experiences in school and in the community.

Curriculum Vitae: Insert your CV here.

Diversity statement : Provide a statement regarding your commitment to diversity and inclusion in your lab. You should indicate how you foster and promote a culture of belonging and inclusion within your lab and the NIDA IRP community. “Belonging and inclusion” refers to the IRP’s commitment to welcome, retain, and foster success in trainees and staff from a broad array of backgrounds, cultures, experiences, and perspectives.

Commitment to the Trainee : Provide information about your interactions with the applicant (i.e., have you met to discuss the SDFDR program and potential projects before submitting this application?) and how you plan to foster their professional/career development. Include information on why you are seeking to participate as a mentor in the SDFDR program.

Project Description: Provide a brief summary of each project in your lab that the applicant will have a role. This summary should be in plain language and be specific to the trainee's planned role. Provide information regarding technical skills the trainee needs to be successful in your lab. Describe specific skills the trainee will develop or need as part of this research plan.

Career Development: Describe the learning opportunities you can offer the trainee. Describe how you will support their achievement of career and other professional development goals.
